REMARKS

New claims 103 – 114 are respectfully submitted to clearly patentably distinguish over Watanabe et al U.S. Patent 5,557,096 for the reasons explained with reference to claim 99 in applicant's Response to Office Action of October 28, 2003, page 13, and page 14, the first paragraph.

In Section 6 at page 3 of the Official Action of May 29, 2003, it is stated that in Watanabe et al, the bar code reader 21 reads the identification number, but this identification number identifies the serial number of the delivery slip, Watanabe, col. 9, lines 2 – 8, and is not:

"communication control information which enables communication with the wireless communication device via the radio frequency spectrum," as recited in new claims 103 – 114. New claim 103 further recites:

"establishing communication via the radio frequency spectrum between the reader device and the wireless communication device based upon the communication enabling communication control information received from the reading of the optical symbology" (new claim 103, the last subparagraph), while the teaching of Watanabe is that the antennas such as 501a, 501b, FIG. 79, are arranged so that the RF communication field is effectively received by the delivery slip 506 of only one parcel at a time; this is confirmed by Watanabe at col. 48, lines 10 – 15, reading as follows:

"Data can thus be read from the home-delivery slip 522 by the transmitting/receiving antenna 525 which is installed in close proximity to the belt conveyor 524. As a result, an identification code of a destination and the like transmitted by a home-delivery slip affixed on a parcel can be prevented from being confused with those transmitted by a home-delivery slip affixed on another parcel." (Emphasis Supplied)
